7. INTEREST AND FEES

7.1. Interest

7.1.1. The method of determining interest

(1) The Bank agrees, calculates and pays interest for credit transactions in accordance with its decision on interest rates.

Interest rate applied on loans is presented on annual, monthly and daily level.

Interest is calculated by conformal or proportional method.

7.1.2. Fixed and variable interest rate

(1) The Bank regulates the type of interest rate, which may be fixed or variable, by the agreement concluded with the client.

7.1.3. Annual effective interest rate

(1) Effective interest rate (hereinafter referred to as: EIR), is a discount rate which equates, on annual basis, current value of all cash flows and/or current value of all cash income with current value of all cash expenses relating to the use of financial services (loans and deposits), which are known at the time of disclosing of this rate.

Cash flows from paragraph 1 of this article include all cash incomes and all cash expenses of the client arising from use of loans, i.e. placement of deposits, such as:

- a) all repayments and payments of loans and deposits;
- b) costs payable by the client (e.g. interest, fees, taxes, etc), i.e. benefits received (interest and other unconditional benefits);
- c) costs (depending on the client) of ancillary services which are prerequisite for the use of the Bank's products, i.e. for its use in a specific manner (e.g. costs of life, property or personal insurance, etc.).

If opening of an account is a prerequisite for use of the Bank's products, depending on the client, cash flows from the paragraph 1 of this article also include costs of opening and maintaining the account, as well as all costs related to execution of such cash flows.

The following is not included in cash flows referred to in paragraph 1 of this article:

- d) costs arising from failure to comply with contractual provisions;

- e) goods purchase costs incurred irrespective of whether the payment is in cash or in any other manner.

Calculation of EIR is based on the following assumptions:

- f) that the contractual relationship will remain in force during the period agreed;
- g) that the contracting parties will fulfil its contractual obligations and do so within timeframes provided in the agreement;
- h) that the nominal interest rate and other costs shall remain unchanged for the duration of the agreement.

The Bank is obliged to calculate EIR in unique, regulated manner to allow comparison with the same offers for different financial services providers.

EIR is expressed in percentages with two decimals, by rounding the second decimal, and is effective starting from the date of calculation. EIR at least equals agreed interest rate. If EIR is lower than the agreed interest rate or it cannot be calculated (e.g. due to relatively large amount of deposit used as collateral for loan in comparison to the loan amount), the Bank is obliged to notify the client on the matter, as well as to provide explanation for lower EIR, i.e. for lack of economically reasonable solution.

As for loans on which the client, in accordance with the agreement, independently decides on schedule of withdrawal (credit lines, etc.), calculation of EIR is performed with an assumption that the total amount of approved loan will be withdrawn at once in full.

As for loans on which the client, in accordance with the agreement, independently decides on schedule of withdrawal, but within defined limits on funds withdrawal and periods in which such funds may be withdrawn, calculation of EIR is performed with an assumption that the funds will be withdrawn at the earliest date provided by the agreement and in the amount of the agreed limit.

As for loans where the agreement provides different interest rates for agreed periods or amounts of loan utilization, calculation of EIR is performed with an assumption that funds will be withdrawn and utilized at the highest agreed interest rate.

As for loans on which the client, in accordance with the agreement, independently decides on the amount of repayment higher than the agreed minimum repayment amount, calculation of EIR is performed with an assumption the repayment amount will be equal to the agreed minimum amount.

As for loans where the agreement provides a number of repayment dates, calculation of EIR is performed with an assumption that repayment will be made at the earliest agreed date.

7.1.4. Default interest rate

(1) The Bank charges legal default interest rate on past due receivables starting from the maturity date, i.e. agreed interest rate, if it is higher than the legal default interest rate.

If the client fails to pay accrued interest within the agreed period, the Bank shall calculate an interest to past due receivables starting from the first date after expiration of the period for which the calculation has been made.

(1) If, during the contractual relationship, circumstances arise which may result in difficult financial situation of the client, i.e. if any other significant circumstances arise which are outside of reasonable control of the client, the Bank may, at client's request, declare suspension of repayment (moratorium) for a specified period, during which the Bank shall not calculate interest to past due receivables.

(1) The Bank calculates and charges fees for services provided to the Bank's clients.

The fees, manner and period of fee collection are determined by the agreement between the Bank and the client.
